What is Cider Apple Vinegar?

Cider Vinegar, also known as Apple Cider Vinegar, is a fermented version of Apple Juice that is used as a salad dressing, preservative, and marinade. The production of Apple Cider Vinegar entails smashing apples and extracting their juice. The addition of yeast and certain kinds of bacteria will then start the fermentation process that transforms the sugar in apple juice into alcohol.

The next stage is the fermentation of alcohol into vinegar, which is carried out by bacteria that produce vinegar. This will give the pure forms of ACETIC ACID and MALIC ACID, which are responsible for the sour flavor of Apple Cider Vinegar.

In current times, high-quality Apple Cider Vinegar is used for weight maintenance and for lowering blood sugar and cholesterol levels.

1. Reversed Life-Threatening Infections and Diseases
