This significant hormonal shift can bring about a range of physical and emotional symptoms, including hot flashes, night sweats, mood swings, and changes in libido. The average age of onset for menopause is around 51 years old, but it can occur earlier or later for some women.

During the menopausal transition, levels of estrogen and progesterone fluctuate, impacting various bodily systems. These changes can have implications for bone health, heart health, and overall well-being. It's a time of transition that may require adjustments in lifestyle, diet, and healthcare. Seeking support and information during this phase is crucial for navigating the changes effectively and maintaining quality of life.
