ProgrammerAnon here

Since Q says 'they have the algorithm' I just want to try to help give a little more insight into how it would work, structurally and psychologically.

To help understand Twitter and FB algorithm you sort of need to view it like a video game.

The controller 'input' is going to be your words/ views/ shared links.

Say the right words.

>(Concatenated strings) (Appended Varchars) (Sentence structure probably mined from real accounts)

Share the right links.

>(Preapproved sites) (Preapproved Authors)

Have the right 'views' and your account is given 'points.'

>(Post value)

The more value your account has plus the value of your post, the higher chance you have to be seen.

>(Chance of post appearance to new followers)

>(Chance of post appearance to current followers)

>When your post is seen, people react, you feel popular.

Popularity is an instinctual desire in the majority of us.

>(Dopamine is released in the Brain)

You post again, but you're sharing an unapproved link.

>(Adds no points to post value)

Plus you use verbage structure that the algorithm does not 'like'.

>(Adds negative points to post value)

Nobodies see's your post.

You want to get that dopamine rush again.

Intuitively, humans have a knack for pattern recognition.

>(Hence why we are in this forum)

So you change up your methods.

Subconsciously, you'll try to post more like the post everybody liked.

It works. The 'algorithm' gave you points.

>(Congratulations. Level 1 complete. You've just been programmed.)

Its a lot like gaslighting.

Imagine being in a relationship where somebody cheated on you every week.

Every week you catch them, and you say "finally its time to lay down the law."

Then everybody around you starts telling you "maybe you didn't ACTUALLLLLY see that"

Your friends stop responding to you.

Etc.

Imagine how much that would drain you.

>>741292 (old bread/algorithm analysis)

The AI (algorithm) is training users of social media.

The user 'learns' to comply to the pattern so that likes can be had and dopamine administered.

The 'bad' user receives much less exposure so ultimately much less chance at the dopamine reward.

The banned user must face immediate dopamine withdrawal.

Very Pavlovian

This is excellent stuff, albeit frightening.

Almost everyone in the world is subjected to this high-order brainwashing.

Another way to reduce impulse control - controlling what is desirable and encouraging people to do what they perceive as desirable.

Establish the controls online, everyone takes it out into the real world.

Peer pressure meets Pavlov.

Ingenious. Evil, but ingenious.

Below the banner is a navigation bar with a home icon and the following links: ABOUT, BUSINESS WITH US, MISSIONS, LOCATIONS, and CA. Below the navigation bar is a news article. The article has a title "New York District sparks STEM interest at Intrepid Museum event" in bold green text. Below the title is a photograph of a man in a military uniform kneeling and talking to two young boys at a table covered with a red cloth that has the Corps of Engineers logo on it. To the right of the photograph is a short paragraph of text: "It was a foggy and rainy day outside, but inside the Intrepid Sea, Air & Space Museum things were buzzing for 'Kids Week' a series of events conducted during the last week of February 2018."
